Editor's notes

Contributors. John G. Slater is Associate Professor of Philosophy at the University of Toronto, Consultant to the Bertrand Russell Archives, and a member of its Advisory Board. His collection of Russell's printed works is unrivalled. Bennitt Gardiner is known in Britain as a writer on music and theatre. He worked for the first and second UNESCO general conferences in Paris and Mexico City; and for the British Foreign Office in Moscow for a year. He is the author of Where the Heart Sings: Moscow Mirage (New York, 1972). Carl Spadoni is completing a doctoral dissertation in philosophy at the University of Waterloo on 'Russell's Rebellion against Neo-Hegelianism'. Andrew Brink is Professor of English at McMaster, a member of the Archives' Advisory Board, and author of Loss and Symbolic Repair (Cromlech Press, McMaster, forthcoming 1977), a psychological study of some English poets. Jo Newberry is teaching in the summer of 1977 at the University of Windsor. She is a Fellow of Lucy Cavendish Hall, Cambridge, where she is continuing research on a biography of Catherine L. Marshall. Charles Haynes has lived in Canada, England, Australia, New Zealand and Japan, but finds all these countries either too hot or too cold. He was recently a map librarian in Wellington (too cold). He is a citizen of Antarctica (much too cold). Back in the mid-sixties, he showed the Russell Archivist his first Russell letter.

Russell medallion. The Bertrand Russell Peace Foundation is proposing to strike a new edition of the medallion produced in 1962 by Christopher Ironside on the occasion of Bertrand Russell's 90th birthday. Anyone who is interested in purchasing the medallion should contact the Foundation at Bertrand Russell House, Gamble Street, Nottingham.

The Collected Essays of Bertrand Russell. Nicholas Griffin, Assistant Professor of Philosophy at McMaster and author of Relative Identity (Oxford, 1977) has joined John Slater and myself as editors of the edition. A local Committee on Annotation has also been formed, consisting of Andrew Brink (English Literature), Louis Greenspan (Religious Studies), Michael Radner (Philosophy), R.A. Rempel (History) and D. Novak (Political Science).

Bagley Wood. In 1904, Bertrand and Alys Russell built a house in Bagley Wood, which is near Oxford. (See I. Grattan-Guinness's article in Russell 28.) It is a charming house, not too large (or too small), with pleasant grounds. Ron Goldstein and his wife Hazel (both McMaster students) heard that it was for sale and visited it this spring. Now they have bought it to live in while Ron pursues doctoral studies on William Morris's socialism at Oxford. They will welcome visitors to the house, especially those with an interest in Russell. They do not, however, promise that visitors will be able to sleep in Russell's bed.
