Recent acquisitions: correspondence

by Carl Spadoni

THE FOLLOWING IS an alphabetical inventory of correspondence obtained from sources outside the Bertrand Russell Estate. The list is the first one since Russell, no. 13 (spring 1974), and is inclusive of acquisitions by the Russell Archives from the summer of 1974 through the spring of 1981. There are 214 entries, covering roughly 4,213 letters and other documents. The letters are listed under the recipient's name when Russell is the sender; otherwise under the sender's name. The list excludes many valuable letters of reminiscence and information written to the Archives from people who knew Russell. Besides basic information such as the names of correspondents, number of letters, inclusive dates, form and provenance, the contents of the letters have been briefly described so that readers can get an idea of the subjects discussed by Russell and his correspondents. In providing subject access, I have aimed at a wide coverage of Russell's interests and activities. In those cases where no subject description is provided, the letters in question are of little research value, being usually an invitation or a request for an autograph or meeting.

The following abbreviations have been used: "BR"—Bertrand Russell, "L." (or "Ls.")—letter (or letters), "P." (or "Ps.")—photocopy (or photocopies), "transcript" (or "transcripts")—transcriptions.

FRANK RUSSELL
TRINITY COLLEGE
CAMBRIDGE, N. H.

Jan. 26, 1944

Dear Hook

The subject on which you write is one about which I feel strongly. I like the "Best 100 Books" project, also, and regard it as a worthwhile side issue. I was very glad to hear of your selection of Newton, & I can see the case for them. But on the other hand I would see how unwise. Books is not comparable to his success. Descartes' geometry is expressed by every modern text-book of analytical geometry. The former idea is: historical approach which leads mathematicians, but with in a subject (for mathematics) or analogy. (Ray read Hawsey.)

To change the subject: I have been elected to a fellowship at Trinity's George Cambridge & expect to talk up residence there this coming autumn. I'd like to see you in 1921, but at that time I cannot accept. It's, however, is a special offer, owing to my being above the age limit.

Yours sincerely
Frank Russell

Dear Ogden

I enclose a little paper on rage, or the chance that you may care to print it in The Day. You may print it anonymously, or "By a retired diplomatist"; or with my name or any other - Snooks Minor e.g.
If you don't want it, I should be very grateful if you would return it.

You can omit the allusion to castration if you so desire.

Yrs

B Russell.

Letter from BR to C. K. Ogden, editor of The Cambridge Magazine. BR's "little paper on rage" was published as "On 'Bad Passions'", 8 (1 Feb. 1919): 359, and signed "O.B.E." The ms. of the article in Archives 1 bears the title, "Morality and Oppressive Impulses", with a partly obliterated date, "Aug. 29. 18". It was written when BR was in Brixton Prison. The allusion to castration was not deleted.

Dear Mr. Shalom,

Thank you for your letter of May 8 and for the enclosures. I have read your critique of Wittgenstein's Tractatus with considerable interest. I do not feel competent to express an opinion as to his metaphysics in general, but I think that you underestimate the influence of mathematico-logical symbolism upon his thinking at the time when he wrote the Tractatus. Take, for example, his statement "which make to ourselves pictures of facts". I do not think that this statement had the sort of metaphysical implications that you attribute to it. Wittgenstein was fond of pointing out the similarity between a gramophone record and the music that it plays. The similarity is structural, which, in a linguistic contest, would be syntactical. Take, for example, the following problem: you discover an ancient inscription in a language of which you know the syntax, but not the vocabulary. What are the possible meanings of this inscription? Exactly the same problem arises in interpreting any statement in mathematical logic. In mathematical logic, strictly understood, there is no vocabulary, but only syntax. When Wittgenstein says that we make pictures of facts, I think he only means that our beliefs have a structural similarity with the facts. I do not see anything particularly metaphysical about this. Suppose, for example, that you see certain black marks on a white ground and that you read these as saying, "Brutus killed Caesar", there is a similarity between your state of mind and the structure of black marks on a white ground. Going a little further, there is a similarity of structure between these marks on a white ground and what happened on the Ides of March. And it is in virtue of this similarity (together with certain other factors) that the words can constitute statement of a fact.

At the time that Wittgenstein wrote the Tractatus, his opinions were in a state of turbulent transition. He believed in simples and atomic facts for the same sort of reasons as Leibniz gives in the beginning of the Monadology. Shortly afterwards, he abandoned these beliefs. He hated my introduction to the Tractatus, but I have always thought that this was because my introduction expounded the views that he had when he wrote the Tractatus and he had, meantime, forgotten that he ever held such views.

His later thinking was very much less dominated by mathematical logic, but I do not think that the Tractatus can be understood except as being, in large part, an attempt to interpret the relation of logical symbolism to fact. There is a wide gulf between the things that interest you in the Tractatus and the things that interested me when I was more concerned with it than I am now. You will find in my Inquiry into Meaning and Truth long and detailed discussions of the principles of atomicity and extensionality which were what I thought most important in Wittgenstein's opinion. But these, I gather, do not interest you.

Yours sincerely,

Bernard Russell
