The first edition of A History of Western Philosophy and Its Connection with Political and Social Circumstances from the Earliest Times to the Present Day appeared in the United States in 1945. Following the book’s publication, and while awaiting its appearance in Britain a year later, Russell continued to modify the text in minor ways. After publication of the first British edition in 1946, Russell continued to correct the text, partly in response to readers who pointed out errors. Such corrections appeared in almost every new British impression in his lifetime. In 1961, when the publisher suggested that the type for the book be reset for a second edition, Russell took the opportunity to shorten the chapter on Bergson and to introduce further corrections. As a result, there are, to date, three English-language paginations for Russell's History.

³ For example, on page 93 he substituted Cornford’s translation of the passage from the Sophist for Jowett’s, added two more notes to Cornford in the same chapter, and on page 42 inserted a note in praise of Cornford’s books on individual Platonic dialogues.

This index is based on the third of these paginations, as used in the Unwin Paperbacks version of the second British edition, first published in London in 1979. Routledge has published the book since 1991, but it is still copyrighted 1961 by George Allen and Unwin Ltd. Since the 1945 edition is widespread in North America, an appendix contains a key to that pagination.

In the History, Russell cites more than 450 works from an unusually broad range of sources. Given his intention to show each philosopher "as an outcome of his milieu" (HWP, p. 7), Russell relies upon many sources in history, literature, music and the sciences, as well as those from within the traditional philosophical canon. Quotations are often used by Russell to illustrate the tenor of the times, as well as to provide counterpoints to a subject's views, or to those of Russell himself.

Of Russell's original secondary sources, no more than a third were published between 1930 and 1942 (the latest of his citations), with most of the rest coming from the late nineteenth or early twentieth century. Russell's revisions for the second edition included very few new bibliographical references, and almost no works published later than the 1940s.

Not all of Russell's sources were easy to trace. For example, no source was cited for the Schopenhauer quotation ("Obit anus, abit unus") given on page 727. It turns out that Russell's knowledge of the quotation probably originated in a letter sent from Desmond MacCarthy to Russell on 16 March 1937. This letter was not published until it appeared in The Autobiography of Bertrand Russell, Vol. 2 (1968). Searching for the quotation in pre-1945 sources located it in a number of biographies of Schopenhauer, and one of them was used by Russell when he made his still extant notes for the chapter. Our thanks go to Mark Dickson for pointing out Russell's private source.

Similarly, Russell often includes quotations from familiar hymns and poems without mentioning either their titles or authors. We are grateful to Roland Hall for discovering many of the sources for these and other anonymous quotations. More work remains to be done by anyone who wants to discover additional documentary sources which Russell may have listed in the notes he took while researching this book (which can now be found in the Russell Archives), but which did not find their way into the final text.

Only occasionally in a book of 848 pages did Russell's casual citation style result in genuine errors. One concerns the biography of Frederick II, which Russell incorrectly attributes (on p. 438) to Hermann Kantorowicz. The book, Kaiser Friedrich der Zweite, was in fact written by Ernst Hartwig Kantorowicz and went through four editions from 1927 to 1936. Another error concerns one of Russell's own publications since, presumably, his reference (on p. 199) to "Architecture and the Social System" is in fact a reference to his 1933 "Architecture and Social Questions" (B&R C33.60).

Russell's sometimes inaccurate quotations, in conjunction with his frequent use of unnamed sources, suggests that at times he was quoting from memory. This may be a function of his not having all of his library with him when he wrote the History. In any event, Russell's lack of rigorous citation is also explained by the fact that the History was intended primarily for a popular audience.

The book's 1961 index is much the same as that of the 1946 edition, but the index to the 1945 edition was considerably fuller. That index included most of the authors mentioned in the current index, as well as many of their books and articles. However, the title entries were much reduced for the index contained in the 1946 edition. It is also worth noting that the 1945 index omitted reference to the Preface and Introduction, and that neither index provided bibliographical data for those works that were cited, or presented them together by author for the convenience of students of Russell's sources. In addition to providing this data, this index includes a more exhaustive list of page references than was included in both the 1945 and 1946 indexes.

In this index, unencumbered numbers refer to pages where a publication is explicitly mentioned or cited. Numbers enclosed within square brackets refer to additional pages where quotations from that publication appear, but without explicit citation. Numbers followed by "n." indicate that the main citation or reference for that page appears in a footnote. Cited books that are contained in Russell's personal library at the Russell Archives are indicated by "RL," and those formerly in his library by "ex-RL," although the editions cited are not necessarily the exact ones he used in writing the History. Additional books from Russell's library which themselves contain cited works, but which have not been directly cited, are listed as separate entries in square brackets. Entries without known authors are included alphabetically by title. Unconfirmed quotations are listed at the end.

*In his letter to R. C. Trevelyan, 21 Dec. 1919 (Ausr., 2: 139), written in the second of his six-year stay in the United States, Russell states that his library is stored in Oxford. Of course, this does not exclude his purchasing of additional books while in the United States.
