The previous general update of correspondence and manuscript acquisitions appeared in Russell, n.s. 19, no. 2 (winter 1999–2000): 183–91. There are 42 entries in the correspondence listing below covering c. 85 items. Received in September 2002, the latest acquisition number reported is 1,391. The manuscript listing of 46 items brings the total to 606 entries. The latest manuscript acquisition is 1,392, received 9 May 2002. Some items were received from other institutions, to whom McMaster Library is very grateful. The following abbreviations are used: L(s). or l(s). = letter(s); P(s). or p(s). = photocopies; p.c.(s). = post card(s); Ts. = typescript; and IISG = Dora Russell papers, International Institute of Social History, Amsterdam.

Warm thanks are due to Carl Spadoni, Research Collections Librarian, for pursuing many of the leads whose fruition is evident here, and to Kenneth Blackwell for the donation of colour prints of documents found on the web.

Dear Mr. Chatalian

I meant to answer your first letter sooner, but wanted to see for a few & considered reply. Now I must answer briefly.

I will take your questions in order.

1. Causes of the war. Go back to Adam, but we will begin with Napoleon.
 He roused German nationalism: of Fichte, & war of 1813. This led to Bismarck, the Franco-Prussian War, Versailles, etc., then a hypothetical world in Germany, making Hitler seem acceptable. Nazi think Germans must be tyrants or slaves.

2. Actual issues not exactly those proclaimed; must be judged from probable results of either side's victory. Axis victory means (a) enslavement of China & India, with an intolerable tyranny, involving large-scale starvation to make room for Japanese population (b) subjection of Europe to Nazis, destruction of distinctive civilizations, torture of Jews, no higher education except for Germans, & for them only technical. End of democracy & of the Axis domination of

Bertrand
 Russell

[How to read History.]
 [By Bertrand Russell]

Perhaps it would be more logical to begin with "How to write history", as most historians seem to me to offer the reader by no means the best that their subject is capable of affording. The reader who wishes to get a true picture of any period or of any great historical movement has to piece it together out of fragments of many books, most of which put comparatively trivial matters in the forefront. History may be written as drama, as epic, or as science; as a rule, it combines elements of all three. When it is written as drama, it aims at showing the conflicts of individuals with each other and with their environment. Plutarch treats history in this way, and, following him, Shakespeare. "Antony & Cleopatra", for example, shows no interest in the Roman Empire or its conquest of the East; it is concerned with Antony as an individual, as a strong man fallen into weakness, but remaining heroic in his decline. This way of writing history is admirable from a literary point of view, but it is very misleading when it is thought to give what has been important in moulding human destiny. While Antony or Augustus ruled Rome made very little difference except to themselves, yet the dramatic treatment concentrates attention upon that issue.

Folio 1 of Russell's 1924 manuscript, "How to Read History" (C24.09). The reader will not find revisions until folio 2.
